Regime of increased readiness declared in Moscow due to coronavirus - Sobyenin's decree (Part 2)

MOSCOW. March 5 (Interfax) - Moscow Mayor Sergei Sobyenin has signed a decree declaring the regime of elevated readiness due to a threat of the novel coronavirus infection spread in Moscow.

"To declare the regime of increased readiness in the city of Moscow," the text of the decree published on the Moscow Mayor's Office website on Thursday said.

The Moscow mayor's decree compels people, who visited those territories, where novel coronavirus infection cases are registered, to inform of their return to Russia, and of the place, dates of their stay in these territories, as well as their contact information on the hotline: +7(495) 870-45-09.

When people experience new respiratory viral infection symptoms, they must immediately seek medical attention from their homes without visiting medical institutions.

People who arrived from China, South Korea, Italy, Iran, France, Germany, Spain and from other countries, where the unfavorable coronavirus situation is observed, must provide for their self-isolation at home for 14 days starting from the day of their return to Russia, according to the Moscow mayor's decree.

All of the Moscow employers must provide for body temperature measurements on their employees at their workplaces and must prevent them from staying in their offices with a high temperature.

Sobyenin tasked the Moscow Healthcare Department with organizing the operation of medical institutions with the priority of providing medical aid at home "to patients in fever with respiratory viral symptoms who visited the countries with the unfavorable coronavirus situation, as well as to patients older than 60 years."

In line with the Moscow mayor's decree, Deputy Mayor for urban planning policy and construction Andrei Bochkaryov is tasked with working on the creation of an infectious disease treatment facility using quickly erectable structures.

Sobyenin also ordered placing the headquarters for the prevention of import and spread of the infection on the round-the-clock mode of operation.

The Moscow mayor put the situation surrounding the declaration of the regime of increased readiness in Moscow due to coronavirus under his personal control.
